Learning to lead...

Leadership is a complex and demanding task drawing on a vast array of skills and knowledge. Few of us are naturally blessed with all the abilities we need to lead well. The good news is that there is plenty we can learn - from leadership theory, practical experience, observation and feedback - and from each other.

The need to develop leadership at all levels is reflected both undergraduate and postgraduate courses at Redcliffe College. We are also committed to the continuing professional development of mission leaders already in leadership positions, or preparing for new leadership roles.

Lead On is a course for mission agency leaders and leadership teams who want to invest in future effectiveness through leadership development. The course has been used in training over 200 leaders from around the world. It is based on Adair's task-team-individual leadership model, with an important additional focus on our own leadership journey and some of the internal aspects that affect our leadership.

The learning environment is interactive, discursive and practical with a strong emphasis on practice, observation and feedback, and learning from each other.

2011 participants included personnel from Interserve, Latin Link and European Christian Mission

Course structure

The course consists of three key modules. and learning is greatest if the same people can commit to attending to all three modules.
